

HONOURS SCHOLARSHIPS

NATIONAL CENTRE FOR EPIDEMIOLOGY & POPULATION HEALTH

The National Centre for Epidemiology and Population Health (NCEPH) offers undergraduate students opportunities to apply for scholarships to study towards honours degrees at ANU in areas related to the research at NCEPH.

There are many factors that affect the health of human populations apart from clinical care. The natural and built environments, genetic endowments, socioeconomic status, diet, way of life, the organisation and funding of health services are some of these factors. Population health involves the scientific study of these factors.

The complexity of the study of population health demands a multi-disciplinary approach. NCEPH is a multi-disciplinary research centre committed to furthering understanding of the determinants of population health. Built upon the disciplines of epidemiology, biostatistics, economics, demography and sociology, it undertakes research and trains researchers at the forefront of inquiry into population health.

NCEPH HONOURS SCHOLARSHIPS

Each year, the National Centre for Epidemiology and Population Health awards a number of Honours Scholarships.

The scholarship program is conducted jointly by arrangement between NCEPH and the Faculty of Arts, Faculty of Science and the ANU College of Business and Economics.

Each scholarship is worth up to A$5,000. There is an additional allowance of A$4,500 for those successful applicants who have transferred their enrolment to this University for the Honours Year.

LEONARD BROOM SCHOLARSHIPS

These scholarships were established by the University from funds endowed by Emeritus Professor Leonard Broom to support programs at NCEPH to serve Indigenous Australians. One or more may be awarded each year.

The Scholarships are intended to enable Indigenous Australian students to undertake a program of study in an area related to the research being undertaken at NCEPH.

Each scholarship will have a value of up to A$5,000. There will be an additional allowance of up to A$1,000 for reimbursement of travel and fieldwork expenses, if justified.

Applicants must be Indigenous Australian citizens and in one of the following categories:

- (a) students currently enrolled or previously enrolled at this University or another Australian university who intend to undertake fourth year honours in an approved field leading to the degree of bachelor with honours at this University
- (b) students currently enrolled or previously enrolled at this University or another Australian university who intend to undertake a program in an approved field leading to the award of a postgraduate diploma
- (c) students intending to undertake a Summer Research Project at NCEPH.
